Louisa is at a music festival and the sun is blazing down. She is there with her best friends, her charismatic bad-boy husband Dan, and her backstage pass – for a long-weekend of carefree hedonism.

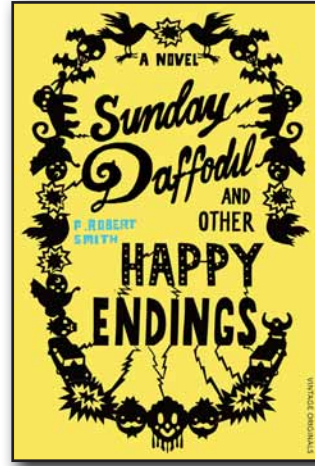

Aged 30 and editor on a style magazine, her life is a parade of free tickets and gigs, openings and all-nighters, drug and alcohol-induced happiness. But cracks have begun to appear beneath the surface. Dan is acting erratically, her family is in the midst of a crisis, and she's missing deadlines at work.

In the surreal micro-climate of fancy dress, pear cider and 48-hour friendships, Louisa has a meltdown. But with a little help from Matt – one of life's good guys – she has one last chance to get her life back on track before it's too late.

Kirsty Robinson is the former editor and co-founder of the award-winning style magazine Marmalade and style bible PiL. She has written for various newspapers including the Sunday Times, the Independent on Sunday, the Mail on Sunday and the Guardian. Born in Kent in 1972, she now lives in London with her husband and two young children.

P. ROBERT SMITH

Sunday Daffodil and Other Happy Endings

serial rights: The Ampersand Agency

Fielding Montanna might be dead, but doesn't know it yet. Sunday Daffodil wants to kill herself, but won't die. Louie Louie has the hots for Fielding's once beautiful mother, and the mysterious Moriarty hasn't slept a wink in twenty-three years. Manhattan, meanwhile, is slowly sinking in a sea of sludge...

Obviously it was always going to have a happy ending.

Praise for Up a Tree in the Park at Night with a Hedgehog:

'Brilliantly quirky.' Matt Dunn

'Buy it, read it, you won't regret it.' Will Ferguson

P. Robert Smith splits his time between inner city Sydney and the beautiful beaches of the Central Coast of Australia. His first novel, Up a Tree in the Park at Night with a Hedgehog was published by Vintage in 2009.
